Janet Kavinsky joined Vulcan Materials Company in September 2015 as Director of Federal and State Governmental Affairs and in 2016 was promoted to Vice President and made a corporate officer. Drawing on 20 years of federal and state policy and advocacy experience and relationships, she formulates and executes strategies to shape the political, legislative, and regulatory environments that affect Vulcan's business success and advises Vulcan's senior leadership team on policy and political developments in Washington, DC, and the 20 states that Vulcan serves. Janet manages several legislative and regulatory issues that present opportunities or risks for the business in the areas of infrastructure investment, tax, environment, and health and safety, working with trade associations, coalitions, and chambers of commerce to advance Vulcan's interests. She directs VMCPAC, Vulcan's political action committee, which makes candidate contributions at all levels of government and organizes Vulcan's annual fly-in to Washington, DC, which includes a training program for high potential employees.

Prior to joining Vulcan, Janet was Executive Director for Transportation & Infrastructure at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce where she led transportation policy, and lobbying efforts, ran the Americans for Transportation Mobility, a nationwide business, labor, and transportation organization coalition, and developed the Let's Rebuild America (LRA) initiative to raise the profile of infrastructure issues, broaden stakeholder engagement, and create new opportunities for businesses to influence public policy.

Janet started her career at the U.S. Department of Transportation (USDOT), consulted for the California DOT during graduate school, and worked with state DOTs at the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials.

A native of the great state of Wyoming, Janet earned her B.S. in Political Economy from the University of Wyoming in 1995 and an MBA from the Stanford Graduate School of Business in 2001. She resides in the Birmingham, Alabama, area with her husband, Paul, and their four cats, and is active on the boards of the Business Council of Alabama, the Red Mountain Theatre Company, the National Association for Urban Debate Leagues, and the George Mason University Center for Public Private Partnerships.
