David Goch is a Partner with the Washington law firm of Webster, Chamberlain & Bean. WC&B, founded in 1970, is the only law firm in the country that represents the nonprofit community exclusively. WC&B has established the reputation of being the leading law firm in the United States specializing in the representation of trade associations, professional organizations, foundations, charities, and other tax-exempt entities. WC&B provides its clients with tax, antitrust, labor (employment law), trademark, copyright, litigation, standards and certification, contracts and other transactional work, corporate, regulatory, legislative, and general legal advice.

David has over twenty five years' experience working with nonprofit organizations of all sizes and has been involved with the Institute program since 1992. David has a bachelor's degree from the University of Michigan and a J.D., with honors, from the University of Maryland School of Law. His singing voice is often compared to Johnny Cash.
